INTERNET USE POLICY

The Ridgefield Library is committed to being a resource for expanding knowledge for the community it serves and to responding to the multi-faceted needs of its patrons by offering free and unrestricted access to a balanced mix of books, media and information technology, including the Internet.

While the Internet is a powerful tool providing access to a wealth of information beyond the confines of the Library's own collection, some information accessed through the Internet may not be current, accurate, or complete, and some material may be considered offensive or inappropriate. The Ridgefield Library cannot assume responsibility for the content, accuracy, completeness, or nature of information found on the Internet, nor can it be responsible for monitoring the use of the Internet by its patrons.

In order to provide computer access to as many people as possible, the Ridgefield Library reserves the right to institute time limits and sign-in procedures as necessary.

The Ridgefield Library does not censor or filter information on the Internet. Parents or guardians are responsible for monitoring and supervising their children's access to the Internet.

As with printed matter, material obtained from the Internet may be subject to copyright laws which govern the making of reproductions of copyrighted works.

Use of the Internet at the Ridgefield Library is governed by guidelines and procedures developed by the Library staff. Please inquire at the Information or Children's Services Desks for details.
